

---

Children can be trafficked for a whole host of reasons including sexual exploitation or to provide cheap labour for domestic or commercial purposes. Although there are no exact figures of the numbers of children trafficked, it is estimated by the UN that some 1.2 million children are trafficked annually. With globalisation and the increasing demand for sexual services and cheap labour, this number is expected to rise significantly. Child victims of trafficking often come from poor families and lack economic and educational opportunities. Children who have been separated from their families, have minimal education, lack vocational skills or have few job opportunities are most at risk. These factors, when coupled with gender, racial or ethnic discrimination or insecurity caused by, for example, armed conflict or natural disaster, create the ideal environment for trafficking networks to thrive.

---

Children can be trafficked for a whole host of reasons including sexual exploitation or to provide cheap labour for domestic or commercial purposes. Although there are no exact figures of the numbers of children trafficked, it is estimated by the UN that some 1.2 million children are trafficked annually. With globalisation and the increasing demand for sexual services and cheap labour, this number is expected to rise significantly. Child victims of trafficking often come from poor families and lack economic and educational opportunities. Children who have been separated from their families, have minimal education, lack vocational skills or have few job opportunities are most at risk. These factors, when coupled with gender, racial or ethnic discrimination or insecurity caused by, for example, armed conflict or natural disaster, create the ideal environment for trafficking networks to thrive.

---

Children can be trafficked for a whole host of reasons including sexual exploitation or to provide cheap labour for domestic or commercial purposes. Although there are no exact figures of the numbers of children trafficked, it is estimated by the UN that some 1.2 million children are trafficked annually. With globalisation and the increasing demand for sexual services and cheap labour, this number is expected to rise significantly. Child victims of trafficking often come from poor families and lack economic and educational opportunities. Children who have been separated from their families, have minimal education, lack vocational skills or have few job opportunities are most at risk. These factors, when coupled with gender, racial or ethnic discrimination or insecurity caused by, for example, armed conflict or natural disaster, create the ideal environment for trafficking networks to thrive.

---

Children can be trafficked for a whole host of reasons including sexual exploitation or to provide cheap labour for domestic or commercial purposes. Although there are no exact figures of the numbers of children trafficked, it is estimated by the UN that some 1.2 million children are trafficked annually. With globalisation and the increasing demand for sexual services and cheap labour, this number is expected to rise significantly. Child victims of trafficking often come from poor families and lack economic and educational opportunities. Children who have been separated from their families, have minimal education, lack vocational skills or have few job opportunities are most at risk. These factors, when coupled with gender, racial or ethnic discrimination or insecurity caused by, for example, armed conflict or natural disaster, create the ideal environment for trafficking networks to thrive.

---

Children can be trafficked for a whole host of reasons including sexual exploitation or to provide cheap labour for domestic or commercial purposes. Although there are no exact figures of the numbers of children trafficked, it is estimated by the UN that some 1.2 million children are trafficked annually. With globalisation and the increasing demand for sexual services and cheap labour, this number is expected to rise significantly. Child victims of trafficking often come from poor families and lack economic and educational opportunities. Children who have been separated from their families, have minimal education, lack vocational skills or have few job opportunities are most at risk. These factors, when coupled with gender, racial or ethnic discrimination or insecurity caused by, for example, armed conflict or natural disaster, create the ideal environment for trafficking networks to thrive.